DRY LAW CALLED LOGICAL END IN CONTROL EFFORT

Virginia Politics Institute Hears Public Welfare Demanded Prohibition

ALL REGULATION FOUND INADEQUATE

Not Prohibition, but Intoxicants Cause Present Problem, Declares Dry

By a Staff Correspondent CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Aug. 18 -Eight years of striving to undo the Eighteenth Amendment have made clear three important factors that encompass inclusively the operations DRYS RECOGNIZE and the purposes of the opponents of prohibition, Edward B. Dunford, assistant general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League, declared in an address that opened a day's debate on the wet and dry issue before the Institute or Public Affairs.

First, he said, the forces urging resistance to the existing law are a minority. Second, they desire to have the beverage liquor traffic restored, and third, there is no agreement among them upon any solution of the social problem growing out of the use of alcoholic stimulants; they argue that conditions under the present law are unsatisfactory but have presented no constructive policy as a substitute. Mr. Dunford's dis-course will be replied to by Wil-liam C. Bruce (D.), Senator from Maryland.

The debate is on the general subject of the Eighteenth Amendment, and Mr. Dunford addressed himself to the amendment and the Constitution. Mr. Bruce, according to advance announcement, will devote his discussion to the "costly and scandalous sequels" which he will contend have resulted from the practical workresulted from the practical workings of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act

An "Inevitable Addition"

The Eighteenth Amendment, Mr. Dunford declared came as an "inevitable addition" to the Constitution: a logical development of the purpose of the original Constitution that this should be a Government to promote the general welfare; that the people have the right to determine the character of their laws and the right to adopt amendments as changing conditions require.

"Students must be taught not to condemn prohibition because of seeming failure of enforcement in many cases. They must be convinced the right to adopt amendments as changing conditions require.

No government dedicated to the promotion of the common welfare, could long exist, he declared, without having to deal with the evils growing out of alcoholic beverages. It was a natural step for states, having adopted prohibition, to seek the extension of liquor suppression, Mr. Dunford said. Almost every conceivable system of regulation and con-ual on an ox-cart was a negligible danger to society; but a drunken engineer or auto driver endangered many. The Senate hearings on pro-hibition legislation in the Sixty Nintl

Pupils Shown Value of School Rather Than Jobs, at 15 Years PLAN TO ADJUST

Power, Mr. Cushing Tells Those Hesitating

With the opening of school but three weeks away, hundreds of Boston boys and girls are deciding whether to continue school or go to work. Having reached the age of 14 and completed the sixth grade, the law says they may leave full-time day school and take a job. Many are tempted. Noting this, Grafton D. Cushing, attorney, and president of the Massachusetts Child Labor Committee, states, as a means of helping the children and their parents to make a right decision, that investi-gation has shown that the child who stays in school eventually makes much more money, finds a better job and enjoys himself better than the one who leaves school before completing the course.
"'What's in it for me?' these boys and girls ask themselves," Mr. Cushing says, "and when about 30,000 boys and girls from 14 to 15 do so each year, 'What's in it for me' is of vital importance. To a boy or girl of that age, and unfortunately to many parents, the money value of an education is the essential factor. In this respect at least, staying in school does pay the average child.

Each Day in School Worth $9 "That each day spent in school adds $9 to the total income earned through life, is the finding of the The Boston & Maine Railroad will government study. According to the "keep abreast of the developments in study made by Dean Lord of Boston commercial aviation," and "it may University Business College, a high school education adds $23,000 to the total amount earned. The average untrained man, according to his estimate, earns a maximum yearly in-come of $1200 by the time he is 30, whereas the high school graduate reaches a maximum of $2000 at the age of 40. The income of the unschool graduate remains practically constant throughout his business

"Schooling pays in other ways besides in the actual dollars and cents earned," Mr. Cushing said. "A longer school period often means a more interesting job, hence a more satis-fied and contented life. Many em-ployers in the so-called better occunations demand that their beginners shall be at least 16 years old, and oftentimes that they shall have a high school education. Most of the skilled trades which offer appren-ticeships require a child to be at

Another Way It Pays

"Staving in school pays also from the point of view of education for leisure time. The average person works eight hours, sleeps eight hours, thus leaving a third of the day free for his own use. On the use of that third of a day depends success and happiness. If it is all spent in aimless 'looking on' amisements, it leads to a do-nothing attitude. If it is partly devoted to recreation that develops thought

If a child really desires an education nowadays, there is opportunity to gain it. But for the average child the answer to, 'What's in it for me?' is the key to a better job, more money, better citizenship and a hap-pier life."

NEW CAMBRIDGE SPAN WILL COST $100,000

The proposed Third Street bridge in Cambridge will be only 80 feet long and will cost $100,000. The order for the bridge is now before the city council, but the construction will perhaps not start until next spring, according to L. M. Hastings, Cambridge city engineer. It will con-nect Kendall to East Cambridge, spanning the Broad Canal. The new First Street and Sixth Street bridges which replaced the old are built of steel and concrete, and the proposed bridge on Third Street will be simi-lar in design and material used. Unified Control of Insular Affairs Urged Under Official of Cabinet Rank

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Aug. 18 Using the Institute of Politics as a platforn m which to gain wide his proposal, Pedro ent commissioner for s in Washington, issued a ca., here for a conference on the Philippine problem by an of-ficial joint committee composed of members of Congress, of the Philip-pine Legislature and of representa-tives appointed by President Cool-

Other speakers in a general Philippine debate were W. Cameron Forbes, formerly Governor-General of the islands, who declared the Filipinos are not ready for self-gov-ernment and proposed an official of cabinet rank to administer American overseas possessions; Vincente G. Bunuan of the Philippine Press Bureau, Washington; Alleyne Ireland, authority on colonial affairs in the Far East and Prof. Ralston Hayder, University of Michigan, member of the Carmi Thompson mission.

The Guevara proposal is viewed by many versed in Philippine affairs as a first tentative offer from an official source for a settlement of the insular problem, and a hint that if the matter is brought to the council table, a compromise on the indepen-dence issue might be reached.

Speech Is Conciliatory

"I propose that the strength and Goebel skimmed across the long course in 26 hours, 17 minutes and 33 seconds, while Jensen's time was 28 hours, 16 minutes and 20 seconds. Inspection of the Woolaroc's gasoline tanks showed the plane could have the plan tanks showed the plane could have traveled about seven more hours. Between 100 and 150 gallons remained. Señor Guevara carefully avoided use of the word "independence." He Pedler, pilot, and Lieuf. V. R. Moore, navigator. The other was the monoplane Golden Eagle pilqted by Jack Frost of New York, and havigated by Gordon Scott of Santa Monica.

Miss Doran's plane went into the race after it was forced back to the Oakland Airport from its first start in the race on account of engine trouble and went out again despite.

It is in the higher status given to native labor and greater support of popular education that American colonial policy has been most sharply divergent from the British and Dutch examples, he

Unified Control Sought

The high light of Mr. Forbes' argument was the declaration that in any event, whether independence was attained or not, the administration of America's insular territories demands a new system of unified control with a secretary in the Presi-dent's Cabinet, possibly as a secretary of the colonies. Opposing immediate independence of the islands, Mr. Forbes nevertheless declared that recognition must be given to the Filipinos.

The address of Mr. Forbes, who is among those mentioned as a possible successor to Leonard Wood as Governor-General, was characterized by its recognition of the dignity of the Filipinos themselves. At one place he declared emphatically that "they are not in any sonse on inferior peoperate to the place of the succession of the succes are not in any sense an inferior peo-ple" and that it will not do to treat em as negligible or insignificant

Although concluding that, in the ppinion of the most careful observers, the islanders "have not had enough training successfully to manage their own affairs," he nevertheless praised President Coolidge's Philip-pine program enunciated in March, 1924, in which the Chief Execu-tive stated that it is "impos-

Almost every conceivable system of regulation and control of the traffic had been tried in some part of the country, he observed, but the only result was an ever-growing conviction that the liquor business could not be regulated, but must be abolished. To bring this about, he said, the states turned to federal authority, as it was the Federal Government they felt which alone could best deal with such violations as smuggling, controlling bonded warehouses, and interestate movements of liquor. The old system of state control was ill adapted to the industrial age, Mr. Dunford held. They are seated five in the front row with the driver, two on the sides and four in the back. An automobile dealer down in Green-ville had sufficient ingenuity to transform a five-passenger touring car into an 11 passenger sight-see-ing bus, capable of making 320 miles a day and having the facility of dodging the usual tourists' hard-ships. Gas, oil, and water are the sole demands which this faithful car has made upon its passengers. A Test for Self-Government

An idea of the length of time necessary to accomplish this end was given by Mr. Forbes in discussing a test by which the stability of the insular government might be measured. This test, he indicated would be the extent of the emancipation of unskilled labor. Freedom plished. Until the children of the safd, has been only partially accomplished. Until the children of the present Philippine laborer have been educated and "have grown old enough to cast the vote," one important element making for stability will be lacking.

"These activities," he added, "could be housed in one of the existing departments of the Government in Washington under an assistant secretary, but the time is not far distant, if it has not already arrived, when their importance will justify a separate department of the Government with a cabinet officer at its head."

Against the alleged moral responsibility to give the Filipino independence is the no less binding promise to give him stable government, Mr. Forbes argued. The quickest way of providing stability, he said, is the extension of the primary school system.

The opening meeting was addressed by Dr. Paul D. Moody, president of Middlebury Coilege, and the members of the staff of the conference who are: Hervey Allen, author; Herbert Gorman, author; Burges Johnson, director of public relations, Syracuse University; Addison Hib-bard, dean of the College of Liberal Arts, University of North Carolina and Edith Mirrielees, author, of Stanford University. Last season was the first of these special conferences, and during the year it has been interesting to watch results from those in attendance. A novel has been written by one of them and has been accepted for publication. Poetry, articles, and short stories have also found publishers.

These results, however, are considered entirely subsidiary to the main purpose of the conferences, to make writers more intelligent re-garding methods by which they may perfect their own work.

IRISH ELECTION IS REGARDED AS PROBABILITY

Future Action of Cosgrave Being Canvassed as the Result of Dail Vote

By Wireless via Postal Telegraph from Halifax

DUBLIN, Aug. 18-Although a little touch of comedy was given to the division in the Dail as a result of the mysterious disappearance of John Jinks, alderman and ex-mayor of Sligo, immediately before vote was taken, after he had pledged himself to support the triple alliance against the Government, the situation remains serious. The abstention of Mr. Jinks made it possible for the Government to win on the Speaker's casting vote and to obtain an ad- the railroad tracks on Chinese ter-

Cosgrave Administration cannot hold office long with the House so evenly divided. What will probably happen is that Mr. Cosgrave will declare for divided. What will probably happen is that Mr. Cosgrave will declare for an early general election which he is now in the position to do so long as he has even a narrow majority of the House.

It is one of the curiosities of the lit is one of the curiosities of the racks was a reprisal for the Chinese authorities, a Nationalist semiofficial news agency characterizing it as "virtually an action of the railroad tracks was a reprisal for the Chinese authorities.

It is one of the curiosities of the Irish Constitution that a defeated Administration cannot go to the country and the Dail has the power to nominate the successor of the defeated President of the Executive Council, who can continue to conduct the affairs of the Nation as long as he has the confidence of the House. It was this that made the crisis of the last few weeks so poignant

Mr. Cosgrave announces that if his party does not win the two immediate by-elections in Dublin, he will call the Dail together the first week in September so that the position can be reviewed in the light of these

Government Victory Probable

It seems almost certain however, that both Government candidates will be returned and this will bring the strength of the Cosgrave party to 73 which will also be the total voting power of the Opposition if Mr. Jinks, after what occurred at the division, still decides to receive the National League whip, and if the Labor member who is at present in Canada has returned to Ireland.

It would seem probable therefore that Mr. Cosgrave will have to rely on the Speaker's deciding vote in the divisions on other motions, which bring the triple alliance again into being, and under these circumstances he is not likely to prolong the life of the present Parliament beyond

Mr. Jinks in an interview explained his absentation as follows:
"On Friday I attended the party meeting and found several members of the National League were opposed to any bargain with Eamon de Valera.

Always a Constitutionalist

"I shared that view strongly, as I have always been a constitutionalist, and I went to Sligo to consult my constituents. I found them solidly in favor of the Government as op-posed to de Valera, and when I came posed to de Valera, and when I came back to Dublin on Tuesday I was surprised to find the members of my party who on Friday had been against a coalition with the Republicans seemed to have changed their minds. The project as outlined by Mr.
Roper would consist of an extensive organization, with headquarters in Washington, and composed of publicspirited, forward-looking men and women, from all parties, adequately financed and seconded by a large of assistants and experts who leet. Mr. Johnson said "but it is

To inspire, and not to hire, interest drinking more than they ever did." not only safeguards the best methods of getting the facts to the citizenry but promotes discussion and controversy, thereby quickening interest in events and men to the advantage of good government. Wide publicity would also result, he added, pointing to the great interest aroused in the Butler-Borah debate held in Boston

Men, Mr. Roper said, more ofter find more zest in getting liberties than in preserving them, once obtained. With the result, he continued, that the more democracy attained by the voters, the less interest they manifest in the acquisition; the greater the voting privileges, the less the desire to vote. The only corrective, in Mr. Roper's view, is greater intelligent acquisintance with affairs and more confidence in the organizations and agencies undertaking to furnish information to the public. find more zest in getting liberties

There is so far, the speaker declared, no serious challenge to de-mocracy in our own country, but the democratic system, like every-thing else, must move with the times or be lost. It can be preserved in America, he said, only if those who believe in it assume their responsibilities and support and advance its interests.

Discussing state and municipal financing before the round table on taxation, Mark Graves, Tax Commis-sioner of the State of New York, de-clared that the problem of incurring bonded indebtedness for permanent improvements revolves about the questions of how and for what the money is to be spent, and also if the funds desired can not be obtained by

NEW SYSTEM TO DIRECT OUR FOREIGN POLICY

Assistant Secretaries Will Specialize in Certain Regions of World

Special from Monitor Bureau WASHINGTON, Aug. 18-The pro otion of Nelson T. Johnson, forme chief of the Division of Eastern Affairs, who has been sworn in as Assistant Secretary of State, definitely establishes for the first time the system of regional direction of the American foreign policy through the offices of Assistant Secretaries of State. This shifting of a part of the Secretary's responsibility to high ranking assistants has been urged in the interest of efficiency.

Under the present organization of the State Department European affairs are under the general direction of William R. Castle Jr., an expert on European history, which he taught while acting as assistant dean of Harvard University. The development of this country's South American program is entrusted to Francis White, formerly a diplomatic secchief of the Division of Eastern Af-

White, formerly a diplomatic sec-retary in Cuba and the Argentine, a chief of the State Department divi-sion of Latin-American affairs and one of the negotiators of the as yet unratified treaty of friendship and alliance with Panama; Far Eastern affairs are now intrusted to Mr. Johnson, who has devoted himself to service in China and Japan.

Matters which require a highly ecialized knowledge of a judicial of the various claims commission come under the direction of Rober come under the direction of Robert E. Olds, as Undersecretary of State. At the peak is Secretary of State Kellogg, who as adviser in matters of foreign affairs to the President has the final word in questions of policy and the trend of this Government's action abroad.

This new system is approved by State Department authorities because it opens the way for comparatively young men to head the respective geographic divisions of the department, where they have to assume full control of the detail of policy development without the onerous responsibility which formerly accrued to those offices. For example, the Western European Division, which recently bore the brunt of preparation for the naval limitation conference at Geneva, has at the head Theodore R. Mortimer, who has had only nine years' experience in head Theodore R. Mortimer, who has had only nine years' experience in the foreign service. Stokeley Morgan, chief of the Latin-American Division, and G. Howland Shaw, chief of the Near Eastern Division, each have had 11 years in the service. With part of the responsibility lifted from them they have more leisure to work out the technical desaits of policy in their respective is of policy in their respective

This gourd, filled with water to the level of the holes, became an artificial horizon. Holding the calabash no water was spilled, an ficial horizon. Holding the calabash so that no water was spilled, an observer could sight through two of the holes along the water line. Once the north star was framed through the twin openings, the navigator knew that he had reached the latitude of Hawaii north of the equator. Helmsmen then turned the canoes westward, sailing thus until home was reached. Navigators of the present day, Dr. Buck added, have found that the Hawaiian calabash was a mathematically correct instrument.

17th and 18th Century Alpujarra Rugs

For Summer Porch or Patio

The word "Alpujarra" is derived from an old Moorish word meaning "the grass lands," and the place itself in the province of Granada is one of the most beautiful in Spain.

The collection in the Spanish House reveals a variety of designs in which the commingling of Spanish and Moorish detail is interestingly evident. The geometric and interlacing patterns of the Moors alternating with the picturesque representations of natural objects . . . grapes with their leaves . . . urns and baskets of flowers . . . cypress trees and whimsical birds and animals, quaintly stylized in the delightful manner of peasant art.

The colorings, deep rich reds, soft greens, strange blues and the luminous yellows of Spain, emphasized with black are mellowed pleasantly and most often fringed with the predominating color of the design.

The rugs have heavy backs of hemp through which the loops of wool are tufted with an effect somewhat reminiscent of early American hooked rugs . . . though the Alpujarra rugs are not hooked, but woven "warp, weft and loops at the same time" in the manner of ancient looped Coptic weaves of which this is believed to be a survival. The rugs are $75 each. -Fourth floor, old building

It was fitting that Mr. Gifford's tribute to Mr. Devonshire's long service should be paid in Salem. Salem has accumulated a great many personal associations with the telephone. Here Alexander Graham Bell lived from October, 1873, to January, 1876, and did much of his preliminary experimenting in the home of Mrs. George Sanders. It was here that he lived when he invented the telephone in Charles Williams Jr.'s shop at 109 Court Street, Boston. His farewell was by no means an anticlimax to his triumphant tour of the Deminion, but mentained the continent-wide expression of affection of the representative of the motherland until the ship grew dim from sight. # MAINE TO RAISE $7000 FUND, FOR BATES DEBATERS

Committee Organizes for Movement to Send Team Around the World

PORTLAND, Me., Aug., 13 (Special)—Raising of $7000, to be expended in sending a debating team from Bates College on a tour around the world, is proposed by a state committee of 25 citizens, of which Guy P. Gannett, treasurer of the New England Council, is chairman.

The purposes of this trip are, first, to promote international friendship and, second, to let the rest of the world know in more intimate detail about the State of Maine and what it has to offer along agricultural, industrial and recreational lines.

The team, not yet selected, will consist of four men, who will act as ambassadors for the State. The committee plans to make a state-wide canvass for funds which will make the trip possible and will endeavor to have as many individual donations as possible, however small, thereby making it a state-wide affair.

Early Responses

If the funds are raised, and from early responses there seems but little doubt that they will be, it will be the first time in history that the citizens of a state-have selected one of its institutions of learning for such an ambitions, undertaking.

both large and small.

As is the custom with this company, the choruses were diminished to a mere handful, so that the de-sired "intimate" proportions were obtained. "Martha" lends itself to this diminution better than "Pagliacci," in which the popular background is essential to the current of the drama.

Through facile measures and deftly fashioned dramatic incidents the cast took their way last evening with suaveness and finish. There was as little sawing of the air as was possible in the stilted soliloquies and concerted bits. The young people infused every available situation with vigor and realism, keeping the action swift and unlagging. Mr. Houston's Plun-kett and Miss Oelheim's Nancy were salient, flavorsome characters. Miss of her voice rang out to match the saucily piquant maid she depicted. Miss Sherman made of the Lady Harriet and the servant Martha a delicate, fragile creature. Her light, flexible voice sounded forth clearly and pleasingly. A gentle, fragrant charm enveloped the familiar measures of "The Last Rose of Summer" as she sang them. But a few times

Summer Review High Schools Likely to Be Made Permanent TO BE RAISED

OF NEW ENGLAND First Season's Work in Boston Schools Is Declared Successful-Vacation Groups Also Provide In-Marked Improvement in terests for Nearly 5000 Children

The first summer review junior high school in Boston, organized this year, was so successful it has practically established itself as a permanent institution, Joseph F. Gould, director in charge of summer review and vacation schools, stated today. Formerly all summer review high school pupils attended the school in the English High School building, on Montgomery Street. This year a junior high school was started in the Oliver Wendell Holmes School, Dorchester Center, and the Lewis building, Roxbury. Industrial employment conditions in all the New England states showed a marked improvement in July, according to the United States Employment Service, which pre-sents the following summary: Maine—While part-time schedules tries in some sections of the State, creating a surplus of workers, re-ports from other centers indicated a marked improvement in these lines during July, and a resumption of full-time operations. And this is especially true in New England with its density of popula-tion and of industrial activity. Yet I believe that we must be alert to adapt ourselves and our service to the development in air transporta-tion.

"Your information that there are in New England today 37 landing fields, with others immediately proposed and some being enlarged; that New England industries are already engaged to a considerable extent in the manufacture of airplane parts: and that a trans-continental parts; and that a trans-continental express service by air is announced to start on Sept. 1, establishes facts that we should take note of. I recall that a member of the New Hampshire public service commission in a recent decision declared his belief that there is a field for air transportation in New England which, if the Boston & Maine did not avail itaely of someone else would.

'the Boston & Maine did not avail it-self of, someone else would.

"To what extent air transportation can be established on an economic basis in New England or elsewhere is not now clear. Few air lines in this country or abroad, I believe, are operating with profit that cannot be traced to subsidies or to a deserved premium for pioneer effort. Yet the airplane commercially today may be LENOX TAX RATE CUT disarmament.

Miss Josephine Schain of New York will speak at the women's luncheon at the Lawn Club on "America Today in World Affairs." Miss Schain is director of the department of inter-national co-operation to prevent war of the National League of Women Voters. She has served as secretary of the two conferences on the "Cause and Cure of War" in which nine national women's organizations have taken part. The round table on the outlawry of war will be under her guidance

Six of these round tables will be held in the afternoon with the assist-ance of Yale University. Prof. Edwin M. Borchard of the Yale Law School is to lead the discussion on international Law and the World Court Prof. Clyde Fisher of Wesleyan University, who is now abroad studying the debt situation, will conduct the round table on that subject. R. L. Morrow, also of Wesleyan will lead the discussion on Latin America. The topics for the other two are disarmament and the humanitarian activities of the League of Nations. An evening dinner at which the emphasis will be on the economic side of international relations will conclude the program. There will be two speakers, business men of international renown. The following organizations, members of the Council, are planning to take part in the Conference: The League of Nations Non-Partisan Association, the Connecticut League of Women Voters, the Connecticut section National Council of Jewish Women, Connecticut Woman's Chris-tian Temperance Union, Hartford cially intereste.

OFFER TO REBUILD SACCO JUROR'S HOME

Citizens of Milton and Others Will Help Mr. McHardy

Preparations have been made for rebuilding the home of Lewis J. McHardy, one of the Sacco-Vanzetti jurors. Assurance was given the McHardy family yesterday that the rebuilding would be carried on by voluntary subscription in their home town of Milton. Letters received at the office of Governor ceived at the office of Governor Fuller, also, indicated that officer citizens, both within and without the State, were eager to help.

Graham McNamee's Contract Permits Tours-Noted for His Baritone Voice

Four years ago, a comparatively unknown concert and church baritone walked into the studios of WEAF at 195 Broadway, New York City, and asked for a job. The concert business was in its annual sump, he explained. Singing dates would be few and far between until the new season opened in the fall. He could talk, he added, as well as sing. Didn't WEAF need another annuancer?

Five minutes later, Graham Mc-Names, today one of the most promi-nent of National Broadcasting Company radio announcers, made his first acquaintance with the microphone, the instrument which has done so much to make his name a ld word in countless homes scattered throughout the United Apparently, Graham and "Mike" got along nicely even at their first meeting. At least, McNamee was engaged as an anonuncer for the sum-mer months, with the express provi-mer months, with the express provision that when the concert season opened in the fall, he was to be free to return to his musical career.

When the three months he had intended to serve as a radiocast impresario were almost up, however, a major sporting event loomed on the radio horizon. McNamee was chosen to describe the contest for the audience of WEAF. The response which McName's word picture which McNamee's word-picture brought from radio listeners made the announcer decide to retain his connection with radiocasting.

Accordingly, he made a new agreement with the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, then owner and operator of WEAF, which allowed him time to fill concert en-gagements when they presented themselves and still handle the microphone for the New York station. Experiments with network or chain radiocasting which were then being carried on resulted so successfully that plans for the permanent linking of out-of-town stations with WEAF for the simultaneous transmission of radio programs were definitely form-ulated.

For the World Series of 1923, played entirely in New York City be-tween the Giants and the Yankees, WEAF had engaged the services of a prominent newspaper man. Dur-ing the first two games of the series this reporter's microphone descriptions failed to measure up to the standards of his writings, and the management of the station decided to try out McNamee on the assignment. His account of the third game found such an enthusiastic reception among listeners and sporting au-thorities that he was detailed to handle the three remaining games. In the fall of the same year Mc-

Namee was again in the radio spot-light, describing outstanding eastern football games radiocast by WEAF. a capacity in which he scored the a capacity in which he scored the same success he had recorded in his verbal handling of boxing bouts and baseball games. His ability to carry the thrills of athletic contests to his listeners, in some cases located thou-sands of miles from the scene of ac-tion, has received so much favorable comment from a variety of sources that little need be added. Since June, 1924, McNamee has

If he handles the microphone at the approaching na-tional convention in 1928—and it appears certain that he will—next year will witness his rounding out of a complete Presidential cycle. In June, 1924, he officiated in an announcerial capacity at the Republican National Convention in Cleveland, from which his voice was carried over the eastern half of the country through WEAF and 17 other prominent radio stations. The latter prominent radio stations. The latter portion of the same month and a part of July found McNamee on duty in the old Madison Square Garden in New York City, at the bitterly contested Democratic National Convention.

During the next few weeks, Mc-Namee journeyed about the country handling the details of the radiocast ing of the acceptance speeches of the various candidates. He introduced to radio listeners President Calvin Coolidge, Republican nominee for Coolidge, Republican nominee for President, who spoke from Washington, D. C.; John W. Davis, Democratic Presidential nominee, from Clarkburgh, W. Va., and Charles G. Dawes, Republican candidate for Vice-President, from Evanston, Ill. Election Day, 1924, was a long day

Tristram of the Centuries

THE appearance of Mr. Robinson's Tristram, long anticipated, and worthy of high azpectation, reminds one of another interesting, though partially forinteresting, though partially forgotten version of the same story written in the nineteenth century, Matthew Arnold's Tristram and Iseult. And since Arnold's poem has in it so much of beauty that is memorable, it is a welcome opportunity to recall it and compare it with the most recent twentieth century version of the ancient tale.

Mr. Robinson has often been called the Browning of today, in his interest in human nature, his love of the unusual and eccentric in human character—so often the frustrated, misunderstood one. But in many ways he might also be compared to Arnold, whose poetry is full of the doubts, whose poetry is full of the doubts.

understood one. But in many ways he might also be compared to Arnold, whose poetry is full of the doubts and questionings of an intellect as restless, as eager, as searching as Mr. Robinson's own.

Mr. Robinson's own.
So we turn to see how these two poets have dealt with the old halfmythical romance, based on Malory and earlier folklore, yet retaining, because of its human poignancy, such because of its human poignancy, such perennial vitality.

For one thing—and this is the most immediately noticeable—both poets have brought into prominence the second Isolt (Isolt of Brittany "of the white hands") who appears not at all in some of the old versions, devoted exclusively to the passionate flery Isolt of Cornwall; or if she does, merely as a gray shadow—a fiery Isolt of Cornwall; or if she does, merely as a gray shadow—a background for her vivid namesake. But for both these poets—each searching deep into human motives—there is a pathos in this white little figure, which makes on the modern reader at least the deeper impression. In both the poem begins and ends with her—in both the other Isolt passes like a fiame of beauty, vivid but momentary, leaving us at last with the cold white figure, looking wistfully out to sea. Nor is this sympathy strange in either case; ing wistfully out to sea. Nor is this sympathy strange in either case; Arnold was ever a poet who loves "lost causes and impossible loyalties," who was prone to see in outward success too much of Philistinism; likewise a study of Mr. Robinson's character will indicate a love of the outwardly thwarted and dispensively. This delicate figure is very like in

The Tristram of Robinson is more modern, more cynical, and yet, it seems hardly as appealing as in Arnold. And how is it with the Isolt of Cornwall? Is she quite convincing in either poem? Or is it true of her as of Helen of Troy that words fail to convey beauty, that it can come only through music like that of a Wagner; or indirectly, as in Homer, who wisely never attempts to describe his heroine, but merely lets us see her through the eyes of the old men on the battlements, Trojans, who hold her responsible for all their misfortunes, and yet know it was inevi-table, because of her loveliness—this face that "launched a thousand ships and burned the topless towers of Ilium." However that may be, in and burned the topless towers of Illum." However that may be, in these poems she is less actual than the Isoit of the white hands. In Arnold she is subordinated in the first and last part, actually appearing only in the second scene—a scene, incidentally, which fails utterly to achieve the high poetry of the rest. The only true vision we get of her is for an unforsettable moment in the for an unforgettable a

Above the din, her voice is in my ears; see her form glide through the crossing spears.

And so too in the later poet, she is never quite realistic and is best seen when she becomes a symbol. Both poets are reflective, but Arnold's meditations in his own person seem like an intrusion in the story, whereas Robinson's are on the lips of his characters. Among the most significant are the words of Isolt of Brittany—words growing out of her long hours of patient watching

But particularly, at the end does Mark become the spokesman of the poet's reflections—wonderingly, questioningly, like the chorus of an old Greek tragedy, trying to convey to the audience the meaning of all the strange, almost incomprehensible things that have passed, trying, but never wholly succeeding—

"I do not know," he said—
"What this is you have done. I am not sure—"

Nothing in Arnold is quite so vivid as the white wings of the sea gulls here, the white flash of the sea gleaming through Mr. Robinson's pages; and yet there is a yearning beauty all its own in Arnold's conclusion, as Isolt sits hour by hour with her gold embroidery frame, the clock ticking off meaningless hours, strokes Tristram's hound, and knows Yourself that you did not yield to the temptation to abandon your pursuit, and you proceed with more vigour than ever. Five or six triumphs over temptation to indolence or despair lay the foundation of certain success; and what is of still more importance, fix in you the habit of perseverance. — WILLIAM CORBETT, in "Advice to Young Men."

When a child I dwelt with mountains, Ragged, rusty, rocky mountains, Dropped from off the higher summits
To companion with the canyons.
Climbed midstream upon the bowlders,
Walked the fallen trunk between them,
Waded with the wriggling minnows
As a rock held quiet waters.

These I knew, and wondered often
Of the mighty Mississippi.
Told no one so great a secret.
Hugged within so deep a glory.
Dreamed of splashing fountains higher
Than our mountain river's reaches.
Gleamed the waters rushing onward,
Magnifying canyon splendors.

Written for The Christian Science Monitor Thus I dreamed, until a morning Brought the giant Mississippi, Quick! I held my dream and hid it Back in childhood with my treasures,
There to stay, this mighty river,
Crashing, flashing, roaring, plashing,
Tossing rainbows toward the heavens,
Thundering some of many waters Thundering songs of many waters,

> So, today, I know two rivers-Two great rivers Mississippi: One of childhood sung in color, One of travel, solemn, silent. Which the dream, and which the river? Which the river? Which the wonder? This I know, there flow two rivers: One that's calling, one that slumbers.

Mark of the Sea

Written for The Christian Science Monito The things of the sea
Bear the mark of the sea:
Its color, salt flavor,
Romance, or wild savor
Of surf-beaten shores. It roars—
And its roaring
Resounds from the shells,
The king conks and queen conks,
And little pink spirals
Of shells from the shore.
Forever the ocean surf
Sings in the shells.

Abalone shells
Reflect sea tones at sunset,
The rose of the sky,
And the sea's fire-opal.
The ragged, stiff ribbons The ragged, stiff ribbons
Of dulce, green and purple,
Have the tang and the saltness
Of wild, rocky seacoasts.
And a maid from the sea
Is so marked by the sea moods
That storm and wild weather
Turn her eyes' gray to greenness
And under clear skies,
With a blue gown to clothe her,
Her eyes will be blue
As the sea's blue and sky's blue, the sca leaves its mark On the sea-born and the sea-bred.

It is not to a want of taste or of desire or of disposition to learn that we have to ascribe the rareness of good scholars so much as to the want of nations perseverance. Grammar is a branch of knowledge, like all other things of high value, which is of difficult acquirement: the study is dry; the subject is intricate: it engages not the passions; and, if the great end be not kept constantly in view; if you lose, for a moment, sight of the ample reward, indifference begins, that is followed by weariness, and As Malory's Tristram is not that of disgust and despair close the book. in haste; keep steadily on; and, that, it you give up, all that you have done has been done in vain. This is a matter of great moment, for out of every ten who undertake this task there are, perhaps, nine who abandon it in despair; and this, too, merely for the want of resolution to overcome the first approaches of weariness. The most effectual means of security against this mortifying result is to lay down a rule to write or to read a certain fixed quantity every day, Sunday excepted . . . if reason interfere and bid you overcome the fits of lassitude, and almost mechanically to go on without the stimulus of hope, the buoyant fit speedily returns; you congratulate yourself that you did not yield to the

Fanny Burney

Fanny was a comfortable person. That is the most astonishing thing about her. With her satiric gift, her sharp crystal wit, her cumulative paragraphs which have something of the Johnsonian invincibility, her chill, objective style in revealing a character—such as the Captain's in "Evelina"—with all this, she was yet warm, lovable, helpful, kissable. Here is the surprise which all exception people give. Fanny's notability came from "holding the mirror up" not to Nature, but to the fashionable world of her own day, in fact, the sword of her own day, in fact, the sword of her own day, in fact, the sword of her own day, in fact, the world of her own day, in fact, its two mitre-shaped points. In these quiet sanctuaries may be realized the import of those beautiful ines of the poet Whittier:

"Thro' the harsh noises of our day, A low sweet prelude finds its way."

This prelude ushers in the "still small voice," which Elijah had not been able to discern amid the noise of the strong wind, or in the earthquake, or the succeeding fire. It was participle of the Latin quiescere, to rest. This wider meaning gives one that one who had fled for refuge read what Mrs. Eddy says on page 559 of Science and Health concerning the "still, small voice." In this chapter of the textbook of Christian Science, entitled "The Apocalypse," are found these lines: "The 'still, small voice' of scientific thought reaches over continent and ocean to the globe's remotest bound. The inaudible voice of Truth is, to the human mind, 'as Our Iraqi houseboy stood before us when a lion roareth.' This porch, in the Hoyts' estimation, made up in comfort all it lacked in looks. A small, shady backyard with colorful flower borders provided with colorful flower borders provided Barbara gave a little squeal of a pleasant outlook. Cool, airy, flower-laughter, but Mrs. Hoyt looked disturbed as she left to answer the letconcern. Yet Alleen discounted it completely for use during the Thorne-dons' stay. For a long time beauty-loving Barbara had played with an idea. She was devoted to the Hoyts and felt she must be extremely tact-

"Barbara," said Aileen solemnly,
"you're a darling."
"Babble," said Mrs. Hoyt smiling,
"you're a darling.'
Miss Benjamin heard of the coming of the titled guests with amazement.
Barbara's part in the preparations for the visit caused her further surprise, but she consented readily enough. The more time Barbara spent at the Hoyts' the less confusion developed in her own rigidly run establishment.

A few inquiries regarding the cstablishment.

A few inquiries regarding the Thornedons convinced Miss Benjamin that the Hoyts would indeed have their hands full, Neither she, nor her stiff-starched Sarah, had any use for "company." Floors were waxed, windows washed and silver polished with the regularity of clockwork, but no one besides the Benjamin household benefited. This policy even extended to the garden where old McAffee wrought flowery wonders.

Miss Benjamin Is Sorry for Her Barbara, trained to conversationa restraint while in her aunt's presence, relaxed daily under Miss Benjamin's discreet questions. In due course Miss Benjamin learned that the chairs had taken the enamel beautifully, that everything washable in the Hoyt house had been washed and that Mr. Hoyt had even gone over its white exterior with the gar-den hose. All this she thoroughly approved. "Nice for them when the Thornedons have gone," she once commented.

"But they're doing it for the Thornedons," corrected Barbara.

Miss Benjamin privately marveled at such altruism. Astonishing people—the Hoyts! Just the same her interest grew. What would be the outcome of this over-ambitious project? For Barbara's sake, she hoped the Hoyts would conceal their almost certain disappointment. Ultimost certain disappointment. most certain disappointment. Miss Benjamin again thought of her radical idea, and although she almost said "Oh bother" to herself, what she said aloud was, "Why not let Alleen come to us while your friends are here? She can have the room next to Barbara's and slip out as early mornings as you need her."

them by the swinging door. With entreating mews she started forth and with much patience and difficulty, led them across the hall and through two large rooms.

"Now," thought the writer as he watched, "now she has reached the end of her journey. She will never get them by that door." But the cat had evidently thought this all out, for without hesitation she started the door swinging. Then lying upon her side and continuing to mew, she pushed against it with all four paws, moving her body along as she did so. Thus, at last, her stretched-out form filled the opening. Continuing to call, she finally persuaded the kittens to walk over her. Then she wriggled loose and the door swung to behind the reunited family.

a quarter of the sun, then we turned to our breakfasts and work. People outside the houses, on sand-hills or other vantage places with a western view, afterwards said everything was still. Some friends watching near hencoops said the fowls went to roost again, although the birds in our back garden and that of our neighbors chirped merrily all the time. These friends and others commented on the strange light seen in the west over the sea. It was as though some one had lit a monster fire on the Welsh hills, which are seen on clear days from the shore. This rosy light, however, was the reflection of the sun. By the papers we seem to have had as spiendid a view as the Astronomer Royal hadatens to walk over her. Then she wriggled loose and the door swung to behind the reunited family.

One day after he had collected the eggs for mother, Sammy lifted Tibbie, his very own hen, in his arms. She squawked loudly, but Sammy whispered to her as they passed through the hen yard gate and climbed the ladder into the hay loft, and Tibbie was quiet at once.

STOCKS MOVE IN IRREGULAR PRICE GROOVE

Moderate Gains in Some Groups Are Offset by Losses in Others

NEW YORK, Aug. 18 (P)—Prices were irregularly higher at the opening of today's stock market, with changes limited to fractions.

Bethlehem Steel began the day fractionally higher at a new high for the year, and Montgomery Ward opened an eighth higher, also at a new top.
Various mercantile shares continued yesterday's forward movement. Buying in this group is largely attributable to expectations of excellent retail business during the autumn season.
Sears Roebuck, May Department Stores, Abraham Straus, Gotham Silk Hosiery and Kayser were among the stocks which displayed early strength. While a number of declines were in evidence, several industrials and specialities moved up a point or so, among them American Radiator, Westinghouse Airbrake and International Combustion.

Bethlehem Steel soon extended its gain, to a point, but Republic sustained a loss of as much. Reports concerning the steel industry as a whole indicated conditions only a little better than in July, while there were various indications that business as a whole is lagging considerably behind last year.

Air Reduction sold down 2 points soon after the opening, and Houston oil lost 1½. Yellow Truck, Allled Chemical, Radio and Shattuck also were among the soft spots.

Prices Uneven

A point gain by Union Pacific was balanced by a like loss by Western Maryland second preferred. Case Threshing Machine was strong, quickly jumping 6 points.

Foreign exchanges opened firm, demand sterling ruling slightly higher around $4.85 25-32, and French francs close to 3.91%.

Early buying converged on shares which frequently move briskly, Case Threshing Machine rising 11 points. Abitibl Power 5% and Houston Oil 3%, the latter more than retrieving its loss.

3%, the latter more than retrieving its loss.

Selling meantime ran its course in the steel, motor, public utility, and chemical issues. Pittsburgh & West Virginia broke 4 and Shattuck 3 points. Buying of the representative railroads, especially Baltimore & Ohlo and Great Northern preferred was in progress at midday.

The renewal rate on coal loans was reduced from 3% to 3½ per cent.

Bond Prices Firm

The bond market continued firm

Bond Prices Firm

The bond market continued firm today, in reflection of the ease of money rates, but trading appeared a little less active than in several recent sessions. High grade railway mortgages were again the leaders, such issues as Erie refunding 5s, Chesapeake Corporation 5s, Kansas City Southern 5s, Lake Shore Gold 4s and a few others selling in moderate amounts at or slightly below their best prices for the year.

Convertible issues displayed firmness, but the brisk demand of the last week or so showed marked signs of falling off. Erie D 4s were the most active in this department, selling up nearly a point just below 124.

Hudson Coal 5s were relatively active just short of 98, but other industrials were quiet, and little attention was paid to public utility bonds.

Foreign securities were led again by French issues, especially the governmental 7s and Department of Seine 7s, both of which were absorbed in rather large numbers at their best prices of 106 and 103% respectively.

United States Government bonds were quiet and steady.

LONDON STOCK MARKET IS QUIET

LONDON, Aug 18—Trading on the stock exchange was again of a holiday character, with dealings in many securities almost at a standstill.

The near approach of Fortnightly Settlement Day also restrained business. Mines were heavy, being influenced by renewed weakness in De Beers, which declined rapidly under South African selling.

Demand for U. S. Steel was fair, oils were firm, with little business transacted.

ONLY on the Shoulders of Experience!

MILLIONS of dollars are made annually in investment and trading in securities. Only personal and specific counsel, however, backed by years of successful experience can give any sizable degree of profit and income safety to your investments. Such a counsel, such a service—intimate, personal, specific—is to be had. Richard D. Wyckoff, founder of the Magazine of Wall Street, and his corps of financial experts do more than chart the market fluctuations. They are absolutely independent of any interest—do not execute orders for buying or selling—they recommend their subscribing members by wire or telephone the exact listed securities and the exact time to buy or sell these listed securities. If you are an investor or desire to enter the market, if you require safety of principal, maximum income and profits, judicious distribution of your investments, this is the type of service organized for that very purpose.

We, of course, have hopes of re competition in our league is cer-y keen this year," said Manager tainly keen this year," said Manager Robert A. New York and Chicago to contend with 2nd at the same time have labored under the hardicap of having so many players out of the game, it is not at all difficult to understand why we are not leading the league at present."

It is indeed true that the Cardinals should be given much credit for their present high standing considering what they have been up against all this season. If any individuals are to be singled out, Frisch, former Giant, should have his name well up among those mentioned as strong factors in the Cardinals' good showing. His persistent hitting which has kept him among the leading five of the league all season, his fast base-running, which has won for him leading hase-stealing honors with 34 to date, and his sound fielding have helped St. Louis fans forget that Rogers Hornsby is no longer a member of the Cardinals' infield. As a matter of fuct, Frisch has played much better all-around baseball than Hornsby did in 1926 and as well int he field as Hornsby ever did. His sparkling performances are pleasing to watch and his alertness makes every ball game he is in a pleasure to witness.

KUOMINTANG'S EFFORT TO UNITE CHINA A FAILURE

SHANGHAI (Special Correspondence)—The Kuomintang, or National People's Party, has failed to achieve its objective of unitying China under a strong civilian government. This is the most important fact emerging from the confusing welter of rivalry and intrigue that dominates the Chinese political situation today. Keenly disappointing as this fact may be to the Chinese Nationalist Intellectuals and to their liberal foreign sympathizers, it must be recognized and analyzed, if only for the sake of forecasting the future course of Chinese developments. SHANGHAI (Special Correspond

Up to the end of March, 1927, the Up to the end of March, 1927, the Kuomintang Government was remarkably successful. By the end of March the Nationalist régime, which a year before had been a local government of the city of Canton and one or two adjoining provinces, had expanded to a point where it controlled the richer and more populous haif of China that lies south of the Yangtze River, together with the great port of Shanghai. The armies of the northern militarists were in northern militarists were in flight; the capture of Peking and the unification of China seemed a matter of months, if not of weeks.

Indications of Prestige The growing strength of the Na tionalists was clearly reflected in the attitude of the foreign powers. Great Britain surrendered its concessions at Hankow and Kiukiang; the Nationalists were tacitly permit-ted to collect additional customs

Less than four months have passed between the end of March and the writing of these lines; but the situation has changed almost beyond recognition. The united Kuomintang Government has simply disappeared. Government has simply disappeared. There are now two rival governments, one at Hankow and the other at Nanking; but as a matter of fact most of South China has broken away from effective allegiance to either of them. Kwangfung Province, with its capital, Canton, is practically independent, under Gen. Li Tsai-hsin. The vast southern and southwestern provinces of Yunnan, Kweichow and Szechwan are under the authority of local militarists, and pay no tribute or obedience to any central governedience to any central govern-

North of the Yangtze, Marshal Feng-Yu-hsfang has carved out a feudal principality for himself in the shape of the provinces of Shensi, Honan and Kansu. He also acknowledges no authority outside of his own will. The "model Governor" Yen Hsi-shan continues to rule Shansi, while Chang Tso-lin, profiting by the weakness and dissensions of his southern opponents, still holds Peking and Manchagla.

Civil Rule Overthewn

In the territory which is more or

In the territory which is more or less effectively under the control of the Nanking and Hankow governments, military authority has clearly superseded any effective form of civil rule. It is no secret that some of the old Kuomintang leaders who joined the Nanking Government in the hope that it, would represent an effective rallying point against Communism are disillusioned by the predominance of military men in its councils and decisions.

And in Hankow it is not the civil Government, but military commanders like Tang Shen-chi and Ho And in Hankow it is not the civil Government, but military commanders like Tang Shen-chi and Ho Chien who have given the direction to the recent courses of policy, who have stamped out the peasant unions and inaugurated a drive against the labor unions as well. Mrs. Sun Yatsen has left the Government, deviced the statements, and the statements of the statements have had an even on the southeast for a long time. It is here that they expect an opportunity of the statements are the statements.

The cause of the Nationalist victories lay in the adaptation to China of many elements of Russian revolutionary technique under the skilled direction of Michael Borodin, high adviser to the Nationalist Government. Posters, propaganda among the civilian population, political education in the army, organization of labor and peasant unions: these were new things in China and they carried the Kuomintang armies to the fruit comes from Most of the fruit comes from Jones from Most of the fruit comes from Jones from Jon carried the Kuomintang armies to victory more quickly than new weapons of destruction might have

But the Kuomintang had to pay a high price for its wholesale adoption of Communist technique. The con-tinual strikes and land seizures, carried out by the labor and peasant unions, which also showed a ten-dency to usurp functions of governdency to usurp functions of govern-ment and carry out arrests, searches and executions, caused a strong anti-J. G. Wheen, has just returned to and executions, caused a strong anti-Communist reaction on the part of the propertied and educated classes; and this reaction crystallized around Chiang-Kai-shek's revolt and organi-zation of a separate Government at Nanking. The same anti-radical re-action, in less spectacular form and spread over a longer period of time, has now taken place in Hankow.

However, the moderate civilian speciated after a visit to the north.

"Throughout the north there are signs of great activity in religious matters, especially among the Italians," he declared, "and the estab-lishment of the mission is keenly appreciated. The services are well at-tended. A Sunday school has been established, and 50 scholars have has now taken place in Hankow.

However, the moderate civilian element in the Kuomintang was not strong enough single-handed to dissociate itself from the Communists and suppress their revolutionary activities. In avoiding the Charybdis of Communism it rushed into the Scylla of militarism. It is scarcely an exaggeration to say that today such effective power as exists in China is altogether in the hands of the generals, each one of whom the generals, each one of whom pursues primarily personal objects Reviewing the world position from the temperance point of view, she said Austria was actively anti-alcohol. In Denmark the demand for penalties for liquor smuggling had been greatly increased, while prohibition had done much for Finland. Norway had passed a law which made it illegal to supply intoxicating liquor to persons under the age of 21, whilst in Japan, for the same purpose, the age was being raised to 25 pose, the age was being raised to 25 for both sexes. among her flowers, carrying a single specimen, long of stem. While in meditation she became conscious of a sudden whir of little wings.

A beautiful humming bird was poised before the one flower she was holding.

At once she began a soft cooling. Delighted, surprised, motionless, she stood and saw her tiny visitor thrust his bill deep into the recesses where the sweets are stored.

Later in the day she placed a few drops of honey in the same flower and sallied forth to the chosen spot, cooling again, and was overjoyed by the immediate return of her little new-found friend, who, with but little hesitation, fed himself again.

Day after day this delightful little episode was enacted. In due time she placed drops of honey on her hand, and the bird, relieved of balancing in mid-air before an empty flower, soon settled down upon her wrist, coming daily at her call.

Love had tamed the shiest of creatures. A CONTRIBUTION from W. A. F. helles of a "live-wire" newsboy whose energy and honesty have endeared him to his customers in Santa Barbara, Calif.

Miss Agnes Slack, national president of the B. W. T. A. U., pointed out how the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union, to which the B. W. T. A. U was affiliated, was born in prayer in a Presbyterlan church in Ohio (U. S. A.), and the most binding regulation upon the union today, not only upon its individual members, but at every public and private gathering, was the solemn observance of the noontide hour of prayer for the extinction of the liquor traffic all over the world.

**Manchester Guardians A French paper, L'Hôtellerie, the organ of the hotel industry, says that a movement is on foot, and is already making headway, to eliminate the black coat and starched shirt front of the waiter and to substitute the short linen white jacket familiar on board ship and for some time now in the restaurant cars of Continental trains.

Economy and hygiene are pleaded as strong reasons for the change; and it is also suggested that the waiters prefer a distinctive uniform which will prevent the little mistakes between guests and waiters which occur occasionally at evening gatherings.

which occur occasionally at evening gatherings.

A well-known French writer, M. Jules Bertaut, commenting on the threat to the waiters' traditional garb, finds in it what Carlyle would have thought a new "analogy between the costumes of the body and the customs of the spirit." Its departure will harmonize, he thinks, with the disappearance of frock coats and silk hats, with women's shorn locks, with lazz bands and go-as-you-please entertalments.

OUR COUNTRYSIDE

Toledo Blade: Perhaps there is nothing, not even the scattered bill-boards, as homely as the fural mail boxes strung along the roadsides of our country beautiful. As grotesque and fantastic as a half-plucked chicken, they minimize the attractiveness of farm homes. We trust the farmers and beneficiaries of rural mail service will not resent this criticism. We're not so sure it would have been made but for the courage inspired by Uncle Sam.

The Post Office Department has finally taken notice of the disfiguring effects of the type of mail box in use all over the country. Though conscious of the task before it, the Government is to begin a campaign for improvement. It wants mail boxes that will be easier to look at. There are 44,379 rural routes in the United States, with about 100 boxes to each route. To make a success of the campaign the co-operation of the people served will be necessary. Unquestionably the majority of free rural mail beneficiaries will be glad of an opportunity to join the Government in its deaire to add to the

The Unpredictable Future

Prof. Charles Sargent to Harvard seems to have aroused some speculation as to how great the fund he established may ultimately be and how it may be utilized. It appears that he left to the university $10,000, with the proviso that this is to be invested and the interest upon it compounded for 100 years. At the end of that 100 years it is to be divided into two parts, the income of one of those parts to be applied to the maintenance of the Arnold Arboretum, and the other to be reinvested for another 100 years, also at compound interest. A Boston financial statistician estimates that if the rate of interest is 5 per cent, the second fund thus established will amount at the end of 200 years to $97,387,340. At 61/4 per cent, not a high figure for interest-bearing bonds, it would amount to more than $682,000,000. Wherefore, it is held that Professor Sargent has created a very knotty problem for the Harvard authorities, both in the way in which they should reinvest these huge sums of money, and also the use they can make of such enormous capital.

It is an interesting speculation, and peculiarly so for the average man who thinks in terms of thousands—perhaps hundreds—rather than millions. But 200 years is a long perspective through which to view any particular point. What Harvard's needs may be at that time, or whether there shall be a Harvard at all, is a matter beyond human ken. And furthermore, these efforts of benevolent individuals to tie up benefactions for long periods of years have usually resulted in some miscarriage of the purpose of the donors, however good that purpose may have been. A striking illustration of this is the Sailors' Snug Harbor, founded on a farm a mile or two outside of what was New York at the time the donor, Robert R. Randall, passed on. The farm now comprises the area between Fourth and Fifth Avenues and Tenth Street and Waverly Place in Manhattan. The total value of the property and its accumulations is estimated at beyond $50,000,000, and though invested at very low rates of interest, the income runs far past $1,000,000 a year. Its purpose was to found a refuge for sailors in their old age. Unhappily deep sea sailors of the sort that inspired the philanthropic regard of Randall, son himself of "windiammer." have become so scarce that it is said to be difficult to fill the great institution maintained at Staten Island. Rumor has it that even canal-boat men are accepted as eligible and at that only about 100 live in the institution which has $1,000,000 a year wherewith to support them.

A recent article in the Century Magazine by Silas Bent describes several of these benefactions which have been made useless, and even ridiculous, by changing conditions. Two orphanages, for example, in Philadelphia have an aggregate endowment of $8,000,000, but the qualifications prescribed by will for admittance are such that together they can assemble only 114 children, to be supported out of an income of $400,000. In St. Louis, a former Mayor who presided over the destinies of that city when it was a jumping-off place for the far West, was so impressed by the hardships of pioneers who became stranded in the city that he established a trust for the benefit of "worthy and distressed travelers." Seventy-five years have made the benefaction amount to something over $1,000,-000, and the trustees find it difficult to discover enough people legally entitled to aid to exhaust half of the income.

Perhaps, however, the Harvard authorities of 200 years from now may not be embarrassed by so huge a sum as the statisticians now predict. Sometimes the funds do not accumulate with the rapidity anticipated. Benjamin Franklin, for example, when he left £1000 each to Boston and Philadelphia, as a trust for the benefit of young married artisans who were apprenticed, thought that at the end of 100 years each city would have more than £130,000 as the result of his gift. It did not work out that way. In Boston it was less than a third of what Franklin had expected at the end of a century and in Philadelphia less than a sixth. But while the money did not grow as rapidly as he had estimated, the purposes for which he had endowed it to be used had practically disappeared. Apprenticeship has gone out of vogue, and as the result the trustees of the fund in both cities have been embarrassed by the problem as to what can legally be done with Perhaps these incidents may suggest that it is unwise for even men who have been able to accumulate money to think themselves sufficiently sagacious to foresee intelligently the social and economic conditions of a century.

Lightening the Farmer's Burdens

X7ITH the gradual recognition by the urban W population of the United States, or at least by a considerable percentage of those residing in cities and industrial centers whose opinions have an influence in shaping public policies, of the unfortunate conditions prevailing in American agriculture, has come a host of suggestions for remedying this disadvantageous situation, not only for the farmers themselves but for the manufacturing, commercial and transportation interests that are so largely dependent upon agriculture for their permanent prosperity. Of these suggestions, emanating from representative business men, bankers, merchants and professional economists, some have merit and are entitled to respectful consideration; but to an impartial observer familiar with actual conditions on American farms the great majority of the pro-posals for bettering the farmer's economic condition seem vague and inconclusive.

To those recently developed "friends of the farmer" the problem that so urgently demands a solution in the interest of the continuance of American civilization on existing lines is simple. The farmers do not receive a fair return for their arduous labors and invested capital. Very well. Let them study production as a business proposition; adopt better methods and use improved machinery; form co-operative associations for marketing their crops; diversify their products so as to avoid seasonable conditions that may make one particular crop a failure, and they may become as prosperous as the industrial, financial and transportation interests of the country. All of this and much more is being set forth for the instruction and guidance of the farmers, accompanied by an undercurrent of hints that what really is wrong with farming is the ignorance or incompetence of the

The underlying fallacy of nearly all these suggestions from the cities is their failure to recognize the essential fact that so far as the great staple farm crops of the country are con-cerned the problem is not one of increasing production, but of disposing of a surplus that forces down prices to a point that makes farming so unprofitable that in the past six years literally millions have abandoned the land to seek employment in the towns and cities. The farmers of America, as a rule, are more efficient than those of any other country of the world. They have been engaged in their industry for some 300 years, and while the introduction of farm machinery, the railway, and the motor vehicle have substantially changed conditions, the underlying factors are the same. Possibly some day the city critics of alleged farming inefficiency may discover that the way out of agricultural depression is to be found not alone in giving to the farmer added strength to bear his burdens, but also, to even a greater extent, in lightening those burdens.

After Two Years

NE can scarcely realize that nearly two years have elapsed since the Locarno pacts were agreed upon. At that time there was considerable rejoicing, but there was also considerable misgiving. Now it would be difficult to find any serious politician in Europe who would question the wisdom of the policy of 1925.

This or that point may arise, but the fundamental differences have been settled, and there is not a statesman who would wish them to be unsettled. It is impossible to lay too much emphasis on the universal acceptance of the Locarno arrangements. They are firmly established. Now and again, in the daily course of diplomacy, some slight friction can perhaps be noticed. Locarno has not, in the opinion of many people, borne its full fruits, and cannot bear its full fruits until the Rhineland is evacuated. These are reservations which it is proper to make. But on essentials there can be no dispute. Locarno has completely transformed the European situation, and nobody wishes to argue about it any longer. It has entered permanently into the European consciousness.

M. Poincaré in some of his speeches has made references which have raised a storm of protest. Whether it was wise to make such references may be doubted. What cannot be doubted is that M. Poincaré, after explaining the reasons of his suspicions a few years ago, invariably concludes with a whole-hearted indorsement of the Locarno policy. In Germany the same encouraging phenomenon may be observed. There are Nationalists who do not disguise their aspirations, there are incidents which are more or less unpleasant, but the German Nationalists, like the French Nationalists, are convinced that they must keep within the four corners of the Locarno pacts.

It will be remembered that as early as 1924 the way was prepared for the Treaties of Locarno. The occupation of the Ruhr was abandoned and the Dawes Plan was indorsed. At the beginning of 1925, Germany proposed voluntarily to enter into an undertaking with France to respect the Alsace-Lorraine frontier. and to submit other Franco-German matters to arbitration. England was willing to become a third party to an arrangement which should make an end of the age-long feud, Other countion treaties with respect to the eastern territorial dispositions. Those chiefly responsible for the Locarno pacts were Sir Austen Chamber-lain, Dr. Stresemann and M. Briand.

It took some time to hammer out the diplomatic documents, but on October 15 the negotiations in the Swiss town of Locarno were completed. On both sides of the Rhine there was opposition. Attempts were made to interpret the pledges in a narrow nationalist sense. This opposition and these partial interpretations have disappeared. After two years Locarno is not only stronger than ever, but is impregnable; and any discussions that arise are entirely beside the main matter. It is sincerely to be hoped that some judicious celebration of an anniversary which is equal in importance to the anniversary of the armistice will be arranged. The date marks a turning point in European diplomacy. Nations which had been hostile to each other then, decided to cease the great continental quarrel. The letter of the pacts is probably not unimpeachable, but the pacts were the written manifestation of a new attitude, and the trend of thought in western European countries has been increasingly along the lines laid down at Locarno. It is not easy nowadays, nor is it desirable, to recall the bitter antagonism of a few years ago, but even the vaguest recollection of it offers a startling contrast with the actualities of today. That contrast is a complete refutation of the pessi-mists who pretend that no progress has been registered. The progress is immense, so im-mense as to be almost incredible, so immense as to hold out a promise of even greater things.

An "Intellectual" Pageant

CITEPS having been taken to incorporate the Massachusetts Bay Celebration Committee as a permanent organization, and a settled plan of action having been adopted, a suitable observance of the tercentenary in 1930 is assured that will be world wide in appeal. What the Pilgrims and Puritans established in New England, and the heritage which posterity has preserved, will be commemorated through the combined efforts of Boston, Worcester, Springfield and many other cities and towns that have their anniversaries in 1930.

It is generally agreed that the form will not be that of the usual world fair, but rather a glorified old home week in the various municipalities. It is planned also that it shall include some large central idea that it is hoped to make permanent. To be sure, the celebration, like the Statue of Liberty, will be but a symbol, yet it is hoped that it will exercise an influence which will spread far and last long. Quite properly, there will be specialized economic exhibitions, but the spiritual, historic and cultural contributions to the Nation and world that have been peculiar to New England will be strongly

The comprehensiveness of the program assures widespread co-operation and interest. On the various committees, very wisely, the various racial groups are represented. An idea of the vision of the committee that looks over the horizon of the mere material phases of the exposition may be gained from the possible supplement unfolded by the invitation which it has issued that notable congresses, conventions and assemblies shall convene at that time. Special efforts will be made to encourage family reunions. Groups and individuals with ancestral, patriotic and business connections will find particular inspiration in planning their visits as a part of the celebration. As the committee says, this includes those whose ancestors arrived in the Mayflower at Provincetown and Plymouth, on the Arbella at Salem or on transatlantic liners a few years ago.

There is an encouragingly strong sentiment in favor of something permanent in the form of a memorial fittingly to commemorate both the occasion and what it represents. From the various plans something acceptable and worth while is bound to come that will measure up to the opportunity. It seems to be certain and fitting that one of the special features of the celebration should be a reproduction of a colonial village of the type in which the Massachusetts Bay Colony pioneers lived, dreamed, worked and fought while they were hewing their place in the sun. The celebration is thus to be mainly. as it has been designated, an "intellectual" pageant of 300 years of progress, and to the extent that it is such it promises something

Blueberry Pie and Boiled Dinner

LTHOUGH history may not record where Athe first blueberry pie was made, New England undoubtedly is ready to submit its claims. The evidence, circumstantial as it may be, is based largely on the premise that pie, as it is popularly known today, is distinctly a New England institution.

New England, it may be said, had both the opportunity and the motive to produce and give to the world the blueberry pie. It had the opportunity because blueberries grew in abundance among the waste lands of its area, and the motive because the good housewives of an earlier day were constrained to use for food whatever nature so abundantly provided.

At the present time the blueberry pie is at the height of its season. Throughout the entire ple zone and wherever the blueberry flour-ishes the blueberry ple may be said to be without any serious competition. It is not important accurately to trace the lineage of the blueberry pie. It is sufficient to rejoice in its

The blueberry pie ranks with the strawberry shortcake. These two may be said to have no peer in the pastry field, at least in the opinion of those New Englanders who look forward each year with a consuming interest to the appearance of the first of the season's productions. The apple pie may make its claims-and when it balances upon an ample expanse of top crust a pyramid of vanilla ice cream it makes a very strong appeal-but apple pie is an all-theyear product while blueberry pie and straw-berry shortcake, made from the fresh fruit, are strictly seasonal affairs.

The New England boiled dinner need not feel apprehensive over the prominence that these two fruit pastries receive on the menus of many a restaurant. Its long establishment and sterling qualities have inured it against the encroachments which more modern dishes seek to make, but the blueberry pie, if properly constructed with a flaky, tender crust, baked to a delicate brown, the incisions therein oozing with the rich juice of an ample filling of blueberries, is worthy of all the prestige it has enjoyed these many generations.

Editorial Notes

At the dedication of the international bridge between the United States and Canada the singing of different words to the same national anthem tune was forgotten in the swelling solemnity of the harmony. Why should not a committee of musicians of all the powers compose a new song as a universal world hymn at the playing of which all men should arise as a mark of respect to the brotherhood of man and the internationality of the common good, to inculcate a love and a respect for the world? Envisage the Geneva Conference, the League of Nations or any great international gathering arising to the strains of a common tune with identical words dedicated to humanity.

It is evidently a question of quality against quantity in the matter of New Jersey apples, according to information furnished by a bulletin of the United States Department of Agriculture, for it appears that there will be some 275,000 fewer barrels this year than last. But the fruit is reported to be the finest in years. After all, it isn't all in the amount of anything that is available.

In proposing at the Williamstown Institute of Politics a new federal board to do for agriculture what the Interstate Commerce Commission does for the railroads, Dr. Joseph S. Davis of Stanford University asks that this board be given wide powers to devise and adapt farm relief measures to the needs as they develop. A growing solution for a growing problem!

With a few more borders fortified with friendship and trust, such as the Canadian and American, there would be no need for disarmament conferences.

Judges in twenty American states where women now serve on juries report that the latter have acquitted themselves well.

Safety Flying Up-to-Date

OULD you take your hands and feet off the steering wheel and pedals of your automobile for several minutes, turn round in your seat to talk with those behind, and then turn back to find yourself in readiness merely to take hold again and pull up to the side of the road? You would probably not be on the road at all. There are hundreds of nice, attractive ditches, telephone poles, front porches, street cars and other solid objects, with a hearty welcome to extend to the first driver who tries the trick just outlined.

The writer flew a plane recently that does exactly what is described above, however. And to get into the story let us tell of the characters who take part.

First comes Lewis Steward, who was a combat instruc-tor with this writer, at Issoudun, France, during the war. Steward was a crack pilot in those days and has had a ship of his own and done considerable flying since. As I hadn't seen him for eight years, a reunion was in order. This brought into the picture his present "side kick," to use a good old army term for companion, Randolph Page, who came through field eight at Issoudun while we were instructing there. "Ranny" had flown before the war and has flown in the mail service ever since, until eight months ago.

He was chief test pilot for the mail service, flew for four years at night and just recently came in second in the Ford Reliability Tour, flying a Hamilton all-metal monoplane. These two are contemplating the organization of an air taxi service in Chicago which brought the three of us to the Stinson Aircraft Factory in Detroit to talk over ships. This busy plant is presided over by one "Eddie" Stinson and "Bill" Mara. "Eddie" flew long before the war and even has two flying sisters, Catherine and Madge. He is said to have taught more people to fly and to have flown more different ships than any man on this globe today. He is slight, with a winning smile and bushy hair with a tuft of white tossed up through the forelock.

"Eddie" had just come in from a hop in one of his production jobs known as the "Detroiter," a four-passenger cabin biplane using the same type of Wright engine used by Lindbergh and Chamberlin. "Bill" Mara signaled to him to come in and take us three pilots up for a trip. "Eddie" seemed pleased, for he likes to show his craftsman-ship to those who understand the craft enough to appreciate the good things he has worked out.

He also had flown in the reliability tour, obtaining first place with his new monoplane. He had chased "Stew" all around the primary field at Kelly Field, Tex., in the war days, forcefully telling him what kind of a pilot he 'Stew" was then taking his first few flights alone and if there is a time when a pilot can choose the wrong things to do, it is during that period in his career. "Stew" did all of them. I had never met "Eddie" before, and after

The ship was a double control affair, with a side-by-side seating arrangement. Behind these two driving seats was a nice, comfortable side-by-side seat for passengers. The other two having entered first and dropped back into the rear seat, I was elected to sit up with "Eddie" with the idea. of driving the ship as soon as we got up into the familiar atmosphere above.

I had not been flying for some years, and the whole thing was strange. In the war we sat out in the open in heavy flying clothes, tightly helmeted and goggled, with the wind rushing around us and the long nose of the ship ahead. Here we sat in ordinary civilian clothes, no helmet, no goggles, no wind, and no nose by which to fly. In addition, the machine used a wheel control instead of the stick with which I had always flown, and there were present three good pilots who could see every mistake that was made. Not having been in the air for these many years, as previously mentioned, I approached my task with some apprehension.

"Eddie" said, "Take it!" I did! It certainly s strange, yet things came back in a surprisingly natural fashion. Slight overcontrolling was noticeable at times, but in a few minutes I cocked it up on one side and went around in a vertical bank and that made me feel at home again. "Eddie" said that after a few hours' air work I would be as good as ever.

He then asked "Stew" to try it. "Stew" did and liked the feel of the ship greatly. "Eddie" then took the wheel and a mischievous twinkle lit up his laughing brown eyes. He dived a bit, pulled back, and we started up. Here we were sitting loosely (if I may use the word to describe sitting) about in the cabin of this airplane on our way up and over. We knew that "Eddie," with three other up and over. We knew that "Eddie," with three other pilots instead of ordinary passengers, was going to have a little fun, and we all had visions of his pulling the ship up on its back and leaving it there for us to fall against the ceiling and rattle around like marbles in a washboiler.

I did my best to obtain a good grip on the bottom of the seat, for the expected shaking I was to get, but instead "Eddie" was struck at that moment with a great streak of consideration and instead of stopping at the top brought us around and completed a perfect loop. My gripping had been in vain. He had made the loop so smoothly that the centrifugal force had kept us in our seats all the time. centrifugal force had kept us in our seats all the time. It was really wonderful fun. He next pulled her up in a climbing spirat turn and the ship handled perfectly. Then came the point of the story. "Eddie" set the stabilizer for his load, took his hands and feet off the controls, shut off the motor, turned completely around in his seat and started talking to us. We certainly did not know what was coming then. In the old ships it would probably have meant a dive and then a tail spin. But not so with this product of our modern aeronautical engineering

The nose slowly dropped and then the ship started to The nose slowly dropped and then the snip started to gather speed. As the speed increased the nose would come up for a moment until it stalled and then it would drop again. Just like a leaf falling with a rocking motion, the machine gradually lost altitude, the motion, of course being back and forth. It remained absolutely on an even being back and forther making a single move to either keel all this time, never making a single move to either left or right. After dropping for several minutes this way, "Eddie" just calmly stepped back to the controls and started in flying again.

This was certainly the greatest proof of the stability and safety of flying to be found today in the better, modern-designed ships. Even the motorcar cannot equal them for controllability. "Eddie" told about one person who said that flying never thrilled him any more.
"Eddie" did this same stunt and let the plane land that way, merely putting the motor on and off a bit to govern the angle at which he "set her down" in order to make a smooth, three-point landing. His passenger certainly

This was flying as we had all dreamed it should be in those days of eight to ten years ago. Certainly no further hesitancy should be felt about embarking on air trips with such safe planes. A plane so stable as this, without guiding hands and with the motor stopped, approaches the maximum of safety when driven by a capable pilot

As we climbed out of the cabin a small coupé drove up, and Mrs. Stinson was introduced to us. She was at the wheel. "Eddie" looked at us with a smile as he climbed in beside her to go home, and with that same twinkle in his eye we had seen when preparing for the loop, he said, "Now comes the most hazardous part of the day. Mrs. Stinson is driving me home."

From the World's Great Capitals-London

CTANLEY BALDWIN has now announced that the bill he has promised to introduce into Parliament to lower the franchise age for women from thirty years to twenty-one, must wait over until next year owing to the crowde state of the legislative program. Postponement of a measure which excites much contention in Britain means more than one thing. It has put an end to previously prevalent rumors of a dissolution in 1928, since Mr. Baldwin is bound by promises he has given to empower women of twenty-one to vote at the next general elections, and this, cwing to the slowness of parliamentary procedure, could not be brought about unless at least a year elapsed between the introduction of the necessary legislation and the holding of the polls.

It is interpreted also as an indication that the agitation in Conservative circles against this measure has not passed unheeded. Conservatives believe that the proposed change may increase the already unduly large element of irresponsibility in the general electorate. Although they are not prepared to incur the odium of vetoing the measure altogether, they have been pressing for the whole question to be reconsidered. The woman's party is disappointed at the delay, though there may be compensatory considera-tion in the fuller discussions of difficulties for which there will now be time. In refusing to be rushed, therefore, Mr. Baldwin can claim that he has taken the path of wisdom. + + +

One of the odd items among the long list of receipts published by the Chancellor of the Exchequer is the annual sum credited to "conscience money." The annual contributions to this fund vary little from year to year. The records show that the first mention of this fund was in 1789, when Pitt announced that he had received £360 with a letter asking him to apply the money "to the use of the state in such manner that the Nation may not suffer by its having been detained from the public treasury." the writer adding, "you are implored to do this for suner by its naving been detained from the public treasury," the writer adding, "you are implored to do this for the ease of conscience of an honest man." The highest total ever reached in one year was £17,000 and the largest single contribution was £14,000. This was received in 1841 from someone who stated that he had been engaged in smuggling for several years and that the sum represented his total profits. his total profits.

The King's Bench division in London recently had the The King's Bench division in London recently had the unusual spectacle of a judge acting as interpreter in his own court. The case was that of a Frenchman, who spoke no English, suing for goods delivered. No interpreter was available, so Mr. Justice Shearman addressed the plaintiff's attorney and said, "Can you speak French?" "I know it sufficiently well not to speak it in public, my Lord," was the reply. The judge then said he would try his hand, and after administering the oath in French, elicited enough information to enable him to decide the case in favor of the Frenchman, who went off smiling amiably at the resourcefulness and wisdom of the English judiciary. judiciary.

The first published report following the Duke of York's appeal for subscriptions for playing fields in Britain shows that the response has been hearty and nation-wide. So far £275,000 in cash, together with 120 acres of land in thirteen fields scattered through twelve counties, has been thirteen fields scattered through twelve counties, has been received. By far the largest subscription has been the £200,000 received from the Carnegie Trust, but so numerous have been the small subscriptions that five columns of fine type were required to list them in The Times. The Prince of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of York, and the Duke of Connaught have all sent in their cheques for this popular and imperatively necessary provision for children and young people in the crowded centers of an industrial country. Subscriptions of £10,000 each have been made by the London Stock Exchange, the Bowden. One cricket club has already given £1000, and it is expected that aid from such sources will grow steadily.

The widening of the east end of Piccadilly in connection with the reconstruction of the Swan and Edgar Building, has necessitated the relaying of this famous London thoroughfare, and the whole of the surface from Piccadilly Circus to Hyde Park Corner is to be renewed. Work is to begin immediately and is expected to take three months, as new water mains and cables are to be put in. For the first time in history, with the consent of the King, traffic will be diverted through the Mall and Marlborough Gate and will come out at the Admiralty Arch.

A series of libel suits has made many British newspapers wary of publishing anything that might by any stretch of the imagination cause them to be haled into court. One the imagination cause them to be under an engaged a newspaper editor in the north of England engaged a young reporter and after warning him of the dreadful consequences that would follow any unfounded statements, consequences that would follow any unfounded statements, sent him out to report a church bazaar. This is the story he turned in:

The bazaar was opened (so it is said) by Mrs. Brown, alleged to be the wife of Councillor Brown, commonly supposed to be a more or less highly esteemed tradesman of this town. She was dressed in what some would describe as fashionable attire, and was supported on the platform by the so-called Vicar, and other reputed ladies and gentleman.

Apparently lawyers are born and not made, if a delightful yarn published in the Manchester Guardian correctly full yarn published in the manchester quartum correctly illustrates the development of the legal mentality from a start in the cradle. There had been a certain liveliness in the nursery just before bedtime, with the result that some of the furniture was broken. There was a fog of highly conflicting evidence in the nursery, and father decided conflicting evidence in the nursery, and father decided that, failing a full and accurate account of what had happened, an anticipated holiday at Scarborough should be canceled. After some moments of deep thought his young son, who will probably some day be Lord Chancellor, son, who will probably some day be Lord Chancellor, summed up the position in a sentence: "I have said I didn't do it, but if I can't go to Scarborough unless I say I did do it, I think I had better say I did it; but, if I did do it, I don't know I did it." Father is reported to have retired from the discussion at this stage, without risking further discomfiture by cross-examination.
